What can be more desirable for home decoration than A NICELY-FINISHED PICTURE of some DEAR ONE GONE to the better land? PHOTOGRAPHY is being daily PERFECTED, with wonderful progress, and no branch of the art has been more IMPROVED than that of COPYING. BRADY, the WASHINGTON-ST. PHOTOGRAPHER, has made this kind of work a specialty; and no matter how small, how old, or how FADED A PICTURE MAY BE, he will COPY, ENLARGE to any size desired, and FINISH in INDIA INK, WATER, or OIL COLORS, or even make from it a PLAIN PHOTOGRAPH, that not the most practised eye can detect from a picture made from a life-sitting. Finishing in this way prevents further decay. BRADY also produces, in the VERY BEST STYLE, all kinds of PHOTOGRAPHIC WORK, also PORCELAINS and beautifully ungraded CRAYON HEADS, at his Tripler Gallery, 88 WASHINGTON-ST. Prices reduced 50 per cent since Jan. 1, 1871.

THE SOUTH PARK TAX.

There now pending before the Legislature a bill on the subject of the South Park tax, against which bill serious remonstrances have been signed by taxpayers.

Try facts in the matter are not perhaps generally understood. The original Act provided for the purchase of certain designated tracts of land for the South Park and boulevards. The Park Commissioners were required to appraise these lands, and, upon receiving title, to pay therefor. The Commissioners valued those lands at $1,865,000, and at that price said all those who accepted the appraisal. Other owners refused, and, upon summoning juries, the owners were awarded higher prices. The result of these condemnations by juries was, that the cost of the whole property was increased from $1,865,000 to $2,600,000. By the original act, the Commissioners were required to assess the cost of the land upon the property in South Chicago and the towns of Lake and Hyde Park, each lot paying all the benefits accruing thereto, and these benefits, of course, diminishing as the lots were distant from the parks. This assessment or apportionment was to be divided into ten equal annual payments. The Commissioners apportioned the original appraisement of $1,865,000, and the bill before the Legislature is to authorize them to amend that assessment so as to apply the additional cost of late, in the Parliament and press of Great Britain. Before Princess Louise, there have been five Princes and Princesses of the present royal family married and presented off, as follows: Princess Victoria, who married the Crown Prince of Prussia in 1858; Prince Alfred, who married the Princess of Russia in 1867; the Prince of Wales, who came of age in 1863 and married in 1863; Prince Alfred, who came of age in 1866; and Princess Helena, who married the Prince of Augustenburg in the same year. In none of these cases have the family and nation been less than three years given to Princess Louise, which is the case of the two Princes were [illegible]. Moreover, there are [illegible] connected with [illegible], present match which should, [illegible] be the signal for the [illegible] to be [illegible] and did so exhibit it, of all the British people, was appointed to [illegible] Bill was glad to see the grand [illegible] marry the man of her choice, [illegible] better by [illegible] and [illegible] glad to see her [illegible] marry the man of her choice.

THE RED SPECTRE AT A ROYAL WEDDING.

Louise Caroline Gudgin, of Windsor Castle, formerly of Buckingham Palace, London, and George Campbell, of Scotland, inland marriage on the 18th instant. These young people love each other truly (to Mr. Gladstone states, on the Queen's behalf, in Parliament), and each is respectably connected, the maiden being a daughter of the Queen of England, and the man first son and heir to the Duke of Argyll. In fact, the couple are better known to the public, even on this democratic side of the Atlantic, by their titles, Princess Louise and Lord Lorne. The excellent character of the Princess Louise's family, with the exception of one or two of her brothers, who are quite fast, has always been undisputed; and, as to that of the Campbells, the father is noted for his devotion to philanthropy, reform, and oriental [illegible]. He is even now the President of the British Aeronautical Society, which spends yearly large sums in sending up air ships and balloons (it costs nothing to bring them down). Brother Lord Lorne has also filled with credit a position in a monarchical [illegible] of Chicago. The family is a very [illegible] one, but in Great Britain antiquity is not associated a drawback. Moreover, both parties are of age, the bride being 23 on the proposed day of her marriage, and the bride is reason why the bridal ceremony is to take place in Lent, contrary to the practice of the Church to which the bride's family belongs.

Those being the facts, it may occur to the reader to ask what business the British Parliament, or the sense of the British people, have and the nuptials of the two young people mentioned. Still, the question will not be asked, for every intelligent reader knows that all Britons have a consuming interest in all the up-things and downthings of the royal family, and especially in the marriage, the multiplication, the [illegible], and the manifold increase and multiplying of that family and its branches.

It is the appropriation of a dowry and annuity to Princess Louise, to-wit: a dowry of $30,000 and an annuity of $6,000, to be conferred upon her upon her nuptials, which has given rise to all the discussion of late, in the Parliament and press of Great Britain. Before Princess Louise, there have been five Princes and Princesses of the present royal family married and presented off, as follows: Princess Victoria, who married the Crown Prince of Prussia in 1858; Prince Alfred, who came of age in 1863 and married in 1863; Prince Alfred, who came of age in 1866; and Princess Helena, who married the Prince of Augustenburg in the same year. In none of these cases have the family and nation been less than three years given to Princess Louise, which is the case of the two Princes were [illegible]. Moreover, there are [illegible] connected with [illegible], present match which should, [illegible] be the signal for the [illegible] to be [illegible] and did so exhibit it, of all the British people, was appointed to [illegible] Bill was glad to see the grand [illegible] marry the man of her choice, [illegible] better by [illegible] and [illegible] glad to see her [illegible] marry the man of her choice.

Conclusion of that Memorable Interview.

Three Cases of Peculiar Embarrassment.

Mr. Houghton, Allen, Jones.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune:

I must confess that I am about as badly embarrassed as the Yankee Hostler, of the Little Giantess, who, when asked by the distinguished Dr. of Divinity, if he was converted, replied, "Well, I don't know, Sir, I don't know; I don't know whether I am or not; I don't know whether I am converted or not; I don't know whether I am or not; I don't know whether I am or not; I don't know whether I am

(From our own correspondent.)

London, Feb. 15.

The Parliamentary session is in full swing, and newspaper readers with the activity displayed by the new men and abilities of old Parliamentary veterans, I see no little difference in the aspect of the House of Commons. But of this I look at it from the gallery, I hardly realize the feel of the room.

The Speaker of the lower house must have a curious fancy for daylight. Without his glass he stares, one can scarcely say, at anything, and with his glass he looks at everything but the occupants who lie addressing the House has a fascination for him. He will not look at them, he does not like to look at, but rather, for service, and he takes it random while he trains his glass upon the wall. Well, I suppose, under such circumstances I shall have to forgive his opinions and would plainly be unnatural if I should not glad if the man can be spared. I don't think the poor fellow is perhaps the Speaker loves by the multiplication tables which annoyed Dr. Johnson, and I suppose he is not so much to blame. I am a daily passenger by a railway which passes under the windows of the mathematic master, and I am pleased with what a multitude of right pots he succeeds in knocking into his pupils. I am not called to remember, nor to the still, but the shadows, the long rows of numbers on the blackboard, and the master's look pretty much alike. A stranger to the scene would imagine that the pupils had set up the right answer over them, the necessity does.

I have observed in the Reformed Parliament a large increase of matriculate students in the ranks of large minds, and now the number of the Speaker's glass is not the only sign of the intellectual activity. Speaking very sensibly, do these men of mind are only the beginning of a new era, the first fruits of the intellectual harvest, which,

PHILADELPHIA, March 1.

Born of 40 sires, the fifth sheik of Sodom is thus season, is all the talk coming from the quarter of eighty miles. Now it is a cut of heretofore common place numbers all in the same stream, and the same undeviating set of little issues peculiar for long spells, the bachelorism of the same element old "Forty Q" has been under the helmet of the whole firm, point; and the full potentiate thing of the seven hundred thousand inhabitants to put down one daring conceit, or unbeaten individuality, or to compel the free to be what they are or cease to roar louder than a bovine menagerie."

SOCIAL STATUS.

To a stranger, the most notable feature of Philadelphia are the relapses of the city into subjection under a Democratic Mayor, and the periodical movement of the more imperfect half of the town toward social, the irregular. In these two cases, where the vile instinct is stronger than public spirit, all wise improvements have to wait till the worse party is uppermost, and then carried out in spite of the rabble, or commonly quarrelled about. A bad governmental is always more certain in its operations than an irresolute or capricious, and at not periodical Philadelphia has been under a Democratic Peace regime, opposed by all the respectable, fought by the lawyers, the subject of debate for thirty years, is to be the site of new public buildings.

This square is nearly at the true centre of the town, where the two wide avenues across Market street and Broad street, and the part is also four green plots. The wed are the other the site of the City Water Works; for ever years it has been a park; it contains high ground and is shaded with fine forest trees, and it is to make one of the best Hotels in Ville for the world.

The four plots are, perhaps, ten hundred and fifty yards square, and they stand nearly gabled points of the compass. Two are Schuylkill River,—a course of two miles; the hill which leads to it is a mile long; there for so many years the now all out down, and the space is covered with coal wood. The Fairmount Park, which is a mere distortion in the country,—the fruit of solidtions, the other of marble, and each side is to be top of the hill, and the Lancaster road by; and the least elaborate Masonic Hall in the country is adjacent. The Hall of the United States stands outside the side of Tree club house, on the famous Union Leagues Club, are in the Union Club House, and near the Colonnade Hotels, the latter a mere white marble palace on Chestnut street. Chestnut street is the Broadway of Philadelphia; one of the hotels in the world is in Philadelphia. The public buildings are down at $4,000,000, also thirds the cost of the United States Treasury at Washington, but they will cost nearer $10,000,000 if the plan is adopted; and the Academy of Fine Arts, which is a mere Doll's Puff, is in plain view
